Published by Cassell in Paperback on 26th September 2002 at £6.99

The complete dictionary of Cockney rhyming slang - essential to help you decipher England's most obscure colloquial language - still used and held with popular affection despite causing those fluent to take twice as long to say anything. You will never need to struggle through Eastenders again.

Try translating this:

As I climbed into my new umbrella's Camilla Parker with a bottle of Calvin Klein it all went Pete Tong. I was Oliver Twist from too much Germaine Greer and I ended up being bob, harry and dick all over my tea-strainers - I lost the whole hopping pot on the field of wheat."

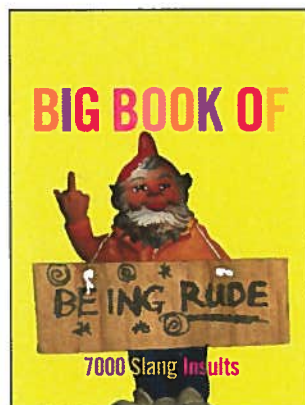

umbrella - fella, Camilla Parker (Bowles) - Follis Royce, Calvin Klein - wine, Pete Tong - wrong, Oliver Twist - pissed, Germaine Greer - beer, Bob, Harry and Dick - sick, tea strainers - trainers, hopping pot - lot, field of wheat - street.
